You may remember the names of Michael Winter and Elizabeth Monk, who were overall winners of the 1996 Daily Telegraph Individual Homes Awards for their low energy home, The Boundary House. Recently, the pair received further recognition for their successful design when they were named winners of the Downland Design Awards, a regional competition organised by Royal Institute of the British Architects. Michael, an architect who works in the Tunbridge Wells area, commented: "It just goes to show that a 'green' building can also be an acceptable and interesting piece of architecture."
